
RECALL OF ALLERGY IMMUNOTHERAPY PRODUCTS

DATE: 7 December 2015

London (United Kingdom) - Stallergenes Greer plc (the “Company”) (Euronext: STAGR), a biopharmaceutical company specialized in treatments for respiratory allergies, today communicated that its subsidiary, Stallergenes SAS (“Stallergenes”) is proceeding with a recall of allergy immunotherapy products which were shipped from its Antony (France) plant after August 13, 2015.

In France, this product recall is conducted according to a risk management plan agreed with the French Health Authority, l’Agence Nationale de Sécurité du Médicament et des produits de santé (ANSM). In other countries, the appropriate course of action will be discussed and agreed upon with each national Health Authority.

This follows a notification received by Stallergenes from the French Health Authority on December 2, 2015, as previously announced, arising from certain technical problems encountered following the launch of its new IT system in August 2015. Production is expected to resume when the Stallergenes’ IT system issues have been resolved and all observations made by the ANSM have been satisfactorily addressed.

Stallergenes is collaborating fully with the Health Authorities with a view to ensuring timely resumption of production and distribution of products at the facility. Patients and their physicians are Stallergenes’ top priority and the company is working closely with them to minimise the impact on care and treatment of patients.

The French Health Authority has advised that, as allergy immunotherapy is a disease modifying treatment with mid to long term effects, the treatment interruption resulting from the product recall is unlikely to present a risk for patient’s health. For the sake of transparency, Stallergenes is also informing healthcare professionals prescribing its products in all concerned countries about this product recall.
